U.S. Ignored Israel in Sending Missiles to Saudis

By Leslie H. Gelb New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — In recent years, U.S. administrations pondering policy decisions have repeatedly been faced with choosing between Israeli and Saudi concerns.

This time, the Reagan administration took little time to decide to proceed with the urgent shipment of 400 Stinger anti-aircraft missiles to Rivadh. It asserted that the Saudis needed the portable weapons immediately to help defend their shipping and oil fields against possible aerial attacks by

Israel quickly announced its opposition to the shipments, saying that the missiles could be readily shifted for use against them, and could possibly fall into the hands of

In the past, Israel and its U.S. supporters have succeeded in getting the administration to drop or sharply modify proposed arms shipments to the Saudis by just such arguments. But on this occasion, they knew that the administration had them over a barrel. A crisis at hand over oil and the survivability of the Saudi government would take precedence over fears of future hostilities.

Also, the administration was careful to limit its decision to 400 Stingers, a number reasonably applicable to shoreline defense, and not to seek again to ship 1,200 missiles, a number that could have wider applications.

There was little Israel or its congressional backers could do to stop the shipment of the Stingers. The law allows President Ronald Reagan to cite national security and waive a 30-day period for Congress to consider the sale. But left unresolved is the question of the compatibility of U.S. and Israeli interests in the Gulf area.

Essentially, officials said, the argument boils down to this:

There was always some tension between these views. The first major test came in 1978 when the Carter administration wanted to sell the Saudis more than 50 F-15 fighter-bombers. After a good deal of pulling and hauling, it was agreed to sell the F-15s, but without bomb racks and extra fuel tanks that could facilitate their possible use in offensive operations against Israel.

As late as 1979, this was all manageable, since the United States and Israel both supported Iran as the keystone to security and stability in the Gulf. But once the Islamic fundamentalists took control of Iran, first the Carter administration and then the Reagan team shifted the focus of American interests to Sandi Arabia.

Even then, the United States and Israel shared some important common interests in the Gulf region. Neither liked Iraq - Israel because it was a potential major military adversary, and the United States because it was considered a

But neither government wanted to lose contact completely with the Tehran government. Iran, with its strategic geo-graphic position and resources, is still the long-term prize of the Gulf. So, as Israel kept the lines open by secret arms sales to Tehran, the administration looked the other way.

The administration believes that Saudi Arabia, as the key-stone of the Western position in the Gulf, should get almost Iran in September 1980 and appeared on the verge of victory. But as Iran began to turn the tide on the battlefield and to The Israelis counter that the Saudis are a very weak reed challenge U.S. interests and friends in the area, officials for American policy and that if they were to use these arms at noted, the Reagan administration decided to "tilt" its policy

This difference, too, was manageable. Israeli officials readily acknowledged that they were helping Iran to prolong the war and to see the two potential Israeli adversaries drain each other in prolonged conflict. Many administration officials agreed that the U.S. interest in the war was that both

But Israel and the United States began to part company on any Gulf issue touching on Saudi Arabia. That was the maior irritant. From the beginning of the Reagan administration's tenure, leading officials have seen Riyadh as a strategic centerpiece not only in the Gulf but in the Middle East as a whole. It was to be the moderate Arab state that, along with Israel, would become the basis of a cooperative Arab-Israeli alliance against the Soviet Union and the middleman in peace negotiations between Arabs and Israel.

To Israeli leaders, this reflected a fundamental misreading of the Saudis. The Saudis, as they saw them, would take no chances anywhere, either for the United States in the Gulf or for peace in the Middle East. The Sandis, the Israelis argued, would always look for another way out, stalling or offering money to potential opponents.

Seen from Israel, if Washington is serious about wanting to keep the Gulf open to shipping, it must be prepared to act itself with Western Europe and not wait for the Sandis. And as the Israelis see it, if Washington wants to keep the friendly house of Fahd in power in Sandi Arabia, Washington must see that selling arms will not do the job.

Philippine Opposition Is Unanimous on Probe

New York Times Service MANILA - Opposition parties called Tuesday for an early conclinsion to the investigation into the assassination last fall of Benigno S. Aquino Jr.

The United Nationalist Democratic Organization, a federation of opposition groupings, unanimous-ly approved a resolution condemning the murder of Mr. Aquino and demanding speedy results from the probe, which is being carried out by

Mr. Chemenko made his pledge in a letter to Petra Keily, a Greens leader, who wrote to the Soviet leader and to the Keagan administration to ask what their their conditions would be for not using chemical and nuclear weapons. MANAGUA (AP) — Nicaraguan troops mounted a major attack against CIA-backed rebels last week in northern Nicaragua, killing about 200 insurgents, a military source said Tuesday.

At least 30 government soldiers were killed in the fighting Wednesday and Thursday over a wide area at San José de Bocay, a town in Jinotega province about 110 miles (about 180 kilometers) north of the capital, the source said. He said the battle was the biggest yet with the Nicaraguan Democratic Force, a Honduran-based rebel group.

About 1,800 troops using Soviet-made artillery were involved, said the source, who asked that his name not be used for security reasons. Heavy fighting continued in the area Tuesday, he said, but he gave no further details.

'We Will Never Forget' — A Story of Vietnam By Lee Hockstader Washington Post Service

WASHINGTON -- Barry Ford and Melvin Green met in Marine Corps boot camp at Parris Island, South Carolina, became best buddies, were assigned to the same artillery unit and went off in 1966 to fight a war together in Southeast Asia. Mr. Ford was 20 and Mr. Green was 19. They had grand plans. Monday, as the black-skirted caisson rumbled down Henry Bacon Drive carrying the flag-draped coffin of the Unknown Soldier of the Vietnam War to Arlington National Cemetery, Mr. Ford, hobbling but still erect, was present Mr. Green was not He did not come home alive. His name is chiseled on panel 18E of the Vietnam Memo-

Soon after his concussion, on a late afternoon in early May 1967, "some guys came up and asked for me, and they said Melvin had been shot." It is a hard story for Mr. Ford to tell. He puts his hand to his heart and says, "It burts." Two months later, mortar fire shattered his left knee and the hand that covered it as he lay curled in a trench under fire. That was July 6, 1967. Five days later, doped up and half delirious, he arrived at Bethesda Naval Hospital near Washington. "What brought you here?" asked the doctor. "Charlie sent me," said Mr. Ford. Monday was Mr. Ford's day of remem-

Hart Warns Probe Is Possible Over Mondale's Use of Funds

By Bill Peterson and Dan Balz

Washington Post Service SOMERVILLE, New Jersey

Senator Gary Hart has raised the possibility of a Justice Department investigation and a fight at the Democratic National Convention over Walter F. Mondale's use of "tainted money" in his campaign. Mr. Hart said the issue could cost the Democrats the election. At a news conference here Monday, Mr. Hart, a Colorado Democrat, said money used by delegate committees in support of Mr. Mon-dale may be resulting in the selection of "illegal delegates." Earlier, in West Virginia, he referred to the funds as "tainted money" and said they were still being disbursed.

Mr. Hart has repeatedly criticized Mr. Mondale on the issue, but he had never publicly raised the possibility of a convention floor fight or a Justice Department investigation.

"Think of what might happen after a convention in which Mr. Mondale achieved the nomination and a Justice Department investigation was launched," Mr. Hart said Monday. "That could be the whole fall election."

He added: "I don't think we want to field a candidate in the fall with a question like that hanging five states in conflict on June 5.

Not a single one of them has a single committee in them." He said newspaper reports had identified "one remaining moribund committee which is neither receiving nor pattern that's been demonstrated recently by Gary Hart," Mr. Mondale said. "He is substantially behind — nearly 700 delegates behind now." He added: "I think he's trying to develop some scheme for getting delegates that have been elected to represent Walter Mondale at that convention, and I don't think it's going to work."

At his news conference, Mr. Hart said that he would prefer not to initiate a fight at the convention over the money issue himself but that he thought "somebody would."

"I think it would be better if the legal and ethical questions were focused on, and this didn't become a Hart-Mondale fight," Mr. Hart said. "Obviously, it makes a nice political struggle, the Hart cam-paign challenging Mondale dele-gates. It heightens the drama." Mr. Hart said that if the issue were not resolved and Mr. Mondale were nominated, the party would face the prospect of a Federal Election Commission ruling "a week or a month later" that Mr.

Mondale had spent $500,000 to $1 million in "illegal money."

Discussing the issue earlier in Grafton, West Virginia, Mr. Hart said: "He clearly is using that taint-I oppose the Reagan administrawell as reports indicating that deleed money in this state, in California

"I think this is a piece of a larger declared last year that they would not accept such donations. Also, it was alleged that the Mondale campaign was using the delegate committees to avoid exceeding the federal spending limit of $20.2 million

> The Mondale campaign has put $400,000 in an escrow account in a Washington bank to repay the delegate committees, but it has said it will not return the money until the Federal Election Commission rules on a complaint brought by the Hart on a nomination campaign.

Mr. Hart said Monday that the Justice Department "has the authority and responsibility" to investigate civil violations and that federal election laws "fall into that jurisdiction."

Among the questions unan-swered, he said, are whether the committees received money illegally, whether individuals and political action committees made dona-tions above the $5,000 federal limit. whether they filed proper reports, and whether Mr. Mondale has exceeded spending limits.

The Growing Debt Burden

The sense of strain is rising among the Latin American countries that carry big foreign debts. The governments of those countries the slow growth of the economy. debts. The governments of those countries have worked desperately hard, in good faith, to meet their commitments. Most of them have accepted a rule of rather harsh austerity. But rising interest rates in the United States keep demanding further sacrifices of them.

Over the past three months, the interest rates in the United States have gone up about 15 percentage points. Most of the Latin debt floats, that is, it is financed at rates that move up automatically with the rates in the market. That point and a half since early March will cost Brazil alone more than $1 billion a year.

There is only one way that Brazil, or any other country, can pay those interest charges. That is through exports to the industrial world. When the prime rate in New York goes up from 11 percent to 12.5 percent, as it has done this spring, that represents an increase of a vehement campaign against foreign goods coming into U.S. markets. Expanding exports

Martin Feldstein, the chairman of President Reagan's Council of Economic Advisers, recently suggested that the indebted countries devalue their currencies to expand their export sales. But the kind of forceful devaluation that Mr. Feldstein has in mind would mean further crosion of living standards in countries that have already seen a substantial decline.

Last weekend the heads of four of the indebted countries - Mexico, Brazil, Argentina and Colombia --- joined in a statement warning that they will not allow interest payments to force them into "a prolonged economic paralysis." The Reagan administration would do well to take that warning seriously. The Latins know that the reason for the rising interest rates is that Mr. Reagan is running an enormous budget deficit and does not want to about one-seventh in interest charges. To meet raise taxes. Why should Brazilians pay for it, Brazil has to increase its exports by one-budget deficits in the United States? Latin seventh. That is not a small feat. Where are those exports going to go? American business-posing hardships on their own people without men and labor unions are already carrying on evidence that Americans are going to take action at least to limit the burden

Keep the Torch Burning

The U.S. Olympic Committee shows admirable initiative in trying to get the Games reorganized before they are destroyed by partisan protest. Moving quickly after Moscow's decision to boycott the Los Angeles Games, the committee has proposed new rules to discourage boycotts of all kinds, and not just by superpowers. The new rules would be coupled with a permanent and crucial agreement on where the Games are to be played. Taken together, the changes could end the crippling pullouts that have diluted three successive Games and may well dilute 1988's too.

There are two types of boycott. Most con-spicuous are those against a host country, such as America's boycott against the Moscow Games in 1980, and now Moscow's withdrawal from Los Angeles. But there are also boycotts on side issues, for example the withdrawal of more than two dozen African countries from the 1976 Montreal Games, to protest a New Zealand rugby team's tour of South Africa. The Africans may stay out this year too, to protest Britain's sports ties with South Africa. but more than half the 1976 boycotters have said they will come.

The way to avoid boycotts against host countries is to pick a place acceptable to everyone. That rules out the United States or the Soviet Union, or divided countries such as South Korea, host of the 1988 Games.

The best solution would be a single, permanent site: in Greece, where the original Games were held. The U.S. Olympic Committee fa-vors rotation among five sites in different parts of the world, but this would invite more haggling over which five cities, and would increase the chance that future antipathies yet unknown would bring still more boycotts.

A third proposal would scatter each Olympics among several sites. This defeats the human interaction of all athletes playing together, and the festival experience as well. It would also dim the spotlight that minor sports can

Besides fixing the site, the American committee proposes that countries declare well in advance whether they will participate — two or three years shead, not just a few weeks. A country that breaks its word would be suspended from the next Games, maybe the next two, and might also be fined. These penalties would be more effective against small countries than big ones. The superpowers might boycott anyhow, anticipating that they would be welcome back anytime. But establishment of a permanent site would remove the host-country issue that provoked the two superpower boycotts.

One immediate hazard remains. With the precedent of three boycotts in a row, what is in the cards for Seoul in 1988? The Soviet Union does not even recognize South Korea as a nation. Rather than risk the obvious, let the 1988 Games be switched now to a place that already has Olympic facilities, such as Tokyo or Montreal. Permanent siting could then be arranged for 1992 and beyond. Boycott-proofing is only one of the problems that confront the Olympic movement, but it is a good place to start. Inertia is the enemy now.

Other Opinion

On U.S. Support of the Saudis

The addition by the Reagan administration of two more KC-135 tanker aircraft to the three already in Saudi Arabia is a move born of political, rather than military, necessity. The Saudis svant their own flying tankers, so they can provide inflight refueling to their own fighters on patrol over the Gulf. Israel doesn't want the Saudis to have the tankers, for fear they will some day fly against Israel. If Israel opposes it, Congress will oppose it.

The president has gotten around this obstacle by keeping the planes in the U.S. Air Force. The Saudis will pay for their operation. While this politically obligatory military maneuver may placate the Israeli lobby, it raises another question: What about the War Powers Act? If the Iraq-Iran war has become so dangerous that our own national security requires us to bypass Congress to rush Stinger missiles over there, aren't U.S. military forces in a combat situation as they fly airborne warning aircraft and tankers in direct support of the Saudis?

While the military answer is "yes," the political answer is "no." Having the U.S. Air Force doing the flying and maintenance satisfies Saudi needs and calms Israeli fears. As long as no U.S. servicemen are getting killed, the War Powers Act will not be raised seriously.

Ganging Up on the Russians?

Soviet President Konstantin Chernenko has denounced the United States, Japan and the Republic of Korea, charging that "they are trying to forge a militarist axis — a Washington-Tokyo-Seoul bloc," and adding that the restoration of militarism in Japan would invite apprehension among Asian nations. This was Mr. Chernenko's first comprehensive statement on Soviet policy toward Asia.

What is most urgent is Japan's and other countries' efforts to achieve Soviet-American rapprochement. We regret that Japan, the United States and other Pacific nations have different opinions from the Soviet Union. We must remember that Soviet participation is indispensable for Asian peace and stability. - The Mainichi Daily News (Tokyo).

Working Hard to Work Less

The prolonged and increasingly damaging battle over a shorter working week in West Germany is a most extraordinary spectacle. not just because it brought as many people onto the streets of Bonn [on Monday] as some of the anti-missile protests of the recent past. There is, of course, nothing sacred about the 40-hour week. Many already work less. But now West Germany's largest industrial union, IG Metall, has gone into battle for the 35-hour week as an alleged counter to unemployment. This paraded concern for the jobless would look less illogical and more compassionate if it were accompanied by a readiness to take a commensurate cut in pay of one-eighth.

Without that, firms are hardly likely to feel able to take on more staff since, with productivity constant, this would simply increase labor costs by one-seventh. And if workers were to increase productivity by such a margin as a quid pro quo, there would of course be no need for more staff. Small wonder that the employers and the government are so adamant in opposing this misconceived campaign.

Democrat Tune Plays Poorly in Parsippany

PARSIPPANY, New Jersey—In this sylvan suburb, where a visiting reporter finds himself sheltering during the New Jersey primary campaign, several major finance, food and technology companies have located office and training facilities in a shared, campus-like setting.

Twenty miles east of here, in the decaying center of Newark, the wind that stirs the azaleas center of Newark, the wind that surs the azaisas of Parsippany blows scraps of paper through gutters littered with discarded bottles.

Back in the early 1970s, when big-city mayors toured the country talking about the need for a "national urban policy." Newark Mayor Kenneth Gibson would say, "Wherever the cities of America are headed, Newark will get there list." But today, even the phrase "urban policy" sounds passe. The future of the society seems to lie, not in the Newarks of America, but in the Parsippanys. As reporters flocking here for the climactic battle of the long Democratic nomination struggle are discovering. New Jersey is no longer the state of oil tanks and old factories one sees traversing the Philadelphia-to-New York City corridor, but a state of high-tech industries and word-processor office complexes.

That new New Jersey was reflected in the only political ads that were running here last week—
ads not of the financially strapped Democratic contenders but ads aired by the Reagan campaign committee. The beautifully filmed scenes, featuring marriages, housewarmings, family reunions and the arrival of new babies, were clearly set in the suburbs, not in the big cities.

All this puts the Democratic race into a different context. When New Hampshire voted way back in February, it was obvious its people adoted President Reagan. But to Democrats, the race against Mr. Reagan seemed far down the road, and New Hampshine was not a state they needed, or realistically aspired, to carry.

Now, the Democrats are only seen weeks away from nominating Mr. Reagan's opponent and they are more conscious of the task of taking him on in states like this one. Neither New Jersey nor California — the other big state that picks delegates next Tuesday - has voted Democratic in

So the Democrats have to raise doubts and argue that gross budget deficits, high real interest rates and trade imbalances can destroy the prospects for a bright economic future. They have to seek economic justice for those who are trapped in the ghetto and will never see Parsippany.

But, historically, as Democratic orators like to say, they have been "the party of hope" for millions of Americans. Today, their speeches make them sound more like "the party of fear." The Reagan ads are a sharp terminder that the Democrats are in danger of losing that franchise on hope - which could be a lot more serious than losing one election.

Sakharov: Seeking A Solution

By Jeremy J. Stone This is the second of two parts.

WASHINGTON - On the last day of a November 1983 visit to Moscow, we met by pre-arrange-ment with Andrei Sakharov's wife, Yelena Bonner, in the U.S. Embassy. We learned that she needed a pacemaker for her heart but was distrustful of the "official doctors.

She showed us a letter Andrei was sending President Yuri V. Andropov, asking for a visa for her to travel to the West. She showed us some anti-Semitic writings from the Ministry of Justice; they had gotten Soviet citi-zens so worked up that she was being accosted in the streets.

She called upon Sakharov support-ers to consider these goals: Improving his medical treatment through access to medical attention in Moscow; returning him to his Moscow dacha, where he could have regular contact with Soviet scientists; and defending his right to emigrate. What to do? This was November and even then there was a hint of a new hunger strike in the offing. The Federation of American Scientists began working on a way that Mr. Sakharov and Miss Bonner might be expelled from the Soviet Union and sent to the West.

It seemed feasible. We knew that officials in Moscow were split on a course of action. Some Soviet officials thought he knew too many secrets ever to be allowed to leave the country. Some were even saying that he was so brilliant that "be still might invent something against us." But others thought that 15 years without a security clearance, and 30 years away from real weapons work, was quite enough to permit his exit.

Moreover, about that time, there were stirrings. The Soviet justice minister, then in Sweden, said that if Mr. Sakharov asked to leave he could do so. When this was repeated in Moscow, Miss Bonner told the press that she and her husband indeed wanted to leave. There were subsequent rumors that Mr. Sakharov was about to be sent to Austria. But as a key West European figure later told one of our scientists, the Soviet Army vetoed Mr. Andropov's effort to send Mr. Sakharov along because Mr. Sakharov knew too much about the internal politics of the Soviet Union.

Still, it had apparently been close, and we had hopes that Mr. Andropov, clever and powerful from his past work in the KGB, might be able to pull it off later. His death put a crimp in any hopes, but the thought remained in place. In January of this

I have less and less hope that this problem will be solved by usual means. I've begun thinking of a hunger strike again, however horri-ble or monstrous it may sound. But is there any other way out?"

struggle that we started for Yelena's trip abroad for the sake of treatment and to see our dear ones. This is a much more difficult and tragic prob-lem than the one in solution of which two years ago your support, together with the support of all our friends in the entire world, played a decisive role. Again, I turn to you for help.
"The KGB has chosen Yelena as a main victim and it will not abandon these plans easily. Her state of health is threatening. Ever since her infarction she is practically denied medical help, which she needs so much. In my opinion, treatment in the academy's hospital will be useless and dangerous -all kinds of things can be done reason not to wait for an answer. Yelena had already been waiting two years for this fourth trip to the West. But when Mr. Sakharov needed treatment for phlebitis and went into the Gorki hospital, Miss Bonner decided to return immediately from her Moscow visit to be with him. On April 12 of this year, she was escorted to the railroad station by three U.S. Embassy employees and handed them a blank envelope, asking them to hold it for her. It contained contingency plans in which Mr. Sakharov would hold a hunger strike while Miss Bonner would take temporary refuge in the U.S. Embassy. Since nothing in Moscow is secret, and since this strategy of using the U.S. Embassy to dramatize the hunger strike would have been extremely provocative, it is no surprise that

In Brutal Silence, the Afghans Still Fall

N EW HAVEN, Connecticut — Afghan refugees interviewed in 1980 reported a slogan they heard frequently from the Communist regime: "We nee the soil of Afghanitation and the state of the soil of Afghanitation and the so stan, not its people." Today, what little we hear of the war in Afghanistan also focuses on the struggle for territory. Few outsiders are familiar with the war against the Afghans that the Soviet Union and its client regime carries out through mass arrests, tor-ture and killings of civilians. These abuses derive from Moscow's counterinsurgency strategy, which is to hold the major cities, military posts and communications links as bases for its military forces and client regime. From the security of these garrisons, the Russians launch offensives against areas of the countryside held by the resistance. These offensives terrorize or expel the rural population. Of a prewar population of 15 million to 17 million, today more than three million are in Pakistan and perhaps one mil-lion in Iran, while the cities of Afghanistan are swollen with uncounted hundreds of thousands. As Moscow steps up its offensive, tens of thousands more refugees are arriving.

In the cities, the Soviet Union and the regime in Kabul still maintain control despite continued armed resistance. While the Red Army, with assistance from the desertion-riddled Alghan Army, holds the checkpoints and guards the key buildings, the Khad - the Afghan political police -arrest and torture. The Khad - the name stands for the Persian words for State Informa-tion Police — was organized in 1980 with the assistance of KGB advisers. By Barnett R. Rubin

The Khad maintains detention centers where it interrogates prisoners under a variety of tortures. An Amnesty International report lists eight such detention centers in Kabul. A former police official I interviewed listed six in Kandahar, and these centers exist in every town.

The same official described a truck coming out of one such center in Kandahar in 1981. Inside were the bodies of those who had died under torture, their hands chopped with an ax and blood flowing from their mouths. Those who survive such tortures are transferred to the prisons, such as Pole Charkhi prison, outside Kabul, where an estimated 22,000 political prisoners are held.

The Red Army's presence depends on a sparse network of paved highways along which convoys continual-ly pass from the Soviet Union to Kabul and provincial centers. When the resistance ambushes these convoys, the Russians take vengeance on the civiliza population. Sometimes the soldiers enter a village and shoot and bayonet civilians, including children. In other cases, special units kill hundreds of civilians at a time with MIGs and helicopter gunships.

To prevent resistance attacks, the Red Army, sometimes together with Afghan units, undertakes "pacifica-tion" operations in villages near cities or roads. During house-to-house searches, a single piece of evidence of collaboration with the resistance ofcution of all males in the house. Sometimes no such evidence is necessary. Witnesses interviewed by the Afghan Information Center in Pakistan said that a Soviet tenit in Kareze Kabir asked the viliagers to take all their valuables out of their houses while they searched for "bandits." When the soldiers began looting, some elders protested. The Russians shot 12 men on the spot. Political or tribal resistance groups control most of the countryside. When resistance forces based in these areas threaten Soviet supply lines or pose a political challenge, Soviet troops launch big offensives. First, they bomb and strafe the area from the air and pound the villages with heavy artillery. These assaults kill hundreds of civilians at a time. Then ground forces move in to search houses and arrest and execute people. They loot and burn down houses, kill livestock, destroy irrigation channels and cut down fruit trees.

snow, they may lose limbs from frostbite or land mines. Many children have perished on the way from discase, starvation and exhaustion. The Afghans are proud of their resistance, and they would rather speak of this than of their sufferings. But in this fifth year of their war against the occupiers, those of us who care for peace or human rights should raise our voices rather than abandon the Afghans to that vast silence where unknown people fall.

The writer, an assistant professor of ten leads to swift and summary exe-political science at Yale University, contributed this comment to The New

But now the gamistet was down:

There's no Soviet domination of Eastern Europe." For this he was mocked and never got over it.

So Mr. Reagan's campaign advisual and the statement of the s which (as far as we know) is now fall but do not know how they can. One far-out possibility is that a consensus in the Politburo can be forged around some kind of deal with the West in which he is given up in return for some tangible "advantage." If, however, the Soviet government decides that Mr. Sakharov can never be permitted to go West, it faces the certainty that other problems will arise and hunger strikes will recur. Can we, or the Soviet leadership, look with equanisity on the prospect of a hunger strike every time something like that happens? Perhaps the solution is to permit

Western physicians to treat Miss Bonner in Moscow whenever she wishes - and, for that matter, to allow her to see her children there, too. (They are American citizens now and can safely return if they reacunce their Soviet citizenship.)
And is this really so umisual? High

Soviet officials have often benefited from treatment from Western doctors in Moscow. Yuri Andropov had West German expert on dialysis. Just as the Reagan administra-tion's "Star Wars" fantasies are forcing scientists of both sides into intense dialogue, the Soviet treatment of Andrei Sakharov is driving them apart. Nothing will demoralize the American scientific community more than the death of Andrei Sakharov. For a decade, we have been in-tensely devoted to this man. Her-alded by the Nobel Peace Prize committee as "the conscience of mankind," support for Mr. Sakharov far transcends the scientific commu-nity. He is a scientist for all seasons. A brilliant man who uncovered the secret of the hydrogen bomb for the Soviet Union, and who made many other discoveries, he then became the leading exponent of scientific responsibility in the Soviet Union, forging links between human rights and national security. A third of a century into the arms race and Cold War, few in America have any real illusions about the Soviet Union. But there is a deep division between Americans on whether dialogue between our two societies is essential or useful. The scientific community still believes in dialogue. In the 1980s, as in the 1960s, it is prepared to lay the groundwork for future arms control; in the 1980s, as in the 1960s, it is prepared to be a lifeline in case of crisis. It is prepared to discharge functions that the U.S. government should be fulfilling keeping some contact going, if for no other reason than that a crisis and disaster might thereby be averted.

However, there is a limit to what we can do. If Andrei Sakharov is taken from us, the Soviet government will have moved from alienating al-most everyone to making even dialogue between the superpowers tenuous. In this lies great dangers for all.

The writer, director of the Federa-tion of American Scientists, contribu-ed this view to the Los Angeles Times.

- pen Se Debate '84: Is Reagan Up to It?

By James Reston

WASHINGTON - Maybe you are still interested in the hanky-panky of the Carter-Reagan debates, now back in the news, but the more interesting question is whether President Reagan will debate his Democratic opponent in 1984.

There is no guarantee that he will. He says he is for debates in principle but he is making no promises. Most presidents do not welcome these debates, which put their challengers on an equal footing with them in a ver-bal prize-fight ring before a national television audience. And Ronald Reagan is no exception.

He prefers controlled situations with a carefully constructed text in his hand. Against the imposing background of the Oval Office, he reads a speech better than any president since Roosevelt, and with invisible screens carrying the text, he does not even seem to be reading it.

He also is not happy with the ques-tion-and-answer games with reporters in televised news conferences, and avoids them as much as possible. But he can always turn difficult questions aside and choose the next questioner. Not so in presidential debates. In these one-on-one confrontations, he is not in charge. He cannot filibuster or evade, at least not without risking the judgment of the people. Accordingly, the planners of his campaign strategy are wondering how to deal with this debating question. They are political professionals and superb stage managers. They know how to get him on television at the Great Wall of China, and meeting the pope in Alaska on his way home. What worries them is what he might say — or that he might not know what to say - when confronted by the brutal facts of foreign and domestic policy. You have to know Mr. Reagan well, his shallow knowledge of history and even geography. his vulnerability to the most obvious questions of fact, to understand the dangers of turning him loose without a Teleprompter and a road map. The element of accident in these verbal wrestling matches can be dan-gerous. President Eisenhower advised Richard Nixon not to debate John Kennedy in the 1960 election. But Mr. Nixon went shead, gave Mr. Kennedy's handsome Irish mug and gift of gab a national audience and lost the election by a whisker, maybe because he lost the debates.

In 1972, Mr. Nixon was so far ead in the polls that he refused to come for the langer strike and, it is believed, it began on May 2.

Whether this strike might have been for the flan court for a strike might have been for the flan court for a strike might have been for the flan court for a strike and it is st one of those fatal blunders by saying that somebody gave Jimmy Carter's debating papers to the Reagan camp, it would be another reason not to avoid a debate. And Mr. Reagan is already in enough trouble with women voters without refusing the demands of the League of Women Voters that the debates go on.

Yet there are others in his camp, who, balancing Mr. Reagan's person-ality against his amiable indifference to facts, think a debate is too risky. that he should campaign from the White House and say he is too busy handling the economy and the Russians to bother with the Democrats. There is, however, an argument in the national interest for presidential debates. It is not clear that a good debater makes a good president. But it is probably the best way the people can see and hear the candidates discuss together their vision of the fu-ture and the issues that divide them. Otherwise, the presidential campaign will be left, as it has been so far, to a separate and vicious clash of personal and partisan slogans, organized by advertising agencies and paid for by special interests on both sides, that concentrates on the past and appeals to fear. At least the debates might give the people a chance to hear the candidates discuss the nation's problems, and get some idea of who has a vision of the future.

PARIS - Almost every night last week, there was a campaign rally, and almost every night there was a fight to go with it, a scenario of sirens and blood: Jean-Marie Le Pen speaks, the crowd shouts "Fas-cist! New York Times Service RAMBOUILLET, France President François Mitterrand tried Tuesday to diffuse a controversy over West Germany's attempt to participate in ceremonies commemorating the 1944 D-Day landings by announcing a joint French-German ceremony next September at Verdun to honor the war dead of both nations.

Mr. Mitterrand made his announcement during a news conference with the West German chancellor, Helmut Kohl, at a château in this town west of Paris. The news conference marked the conclusion of the 43d Franco-German summit meeting, and the two leaders announced a variety of measures that underlined their warm personal relations and close governmental ties.

These smaller lenders already have used every opportunity they could to reduce their exposure to the troubled developing countries. Where these banks have maintained their lending it is due to the fact that the IMF has conditioned its own lending to the provision of new funds from commercial lenders and because the return on such loans is appealing.

Another idea, put forward at a recent World Bank seminar on debt, is that interest charges be adjusted quarterly but paid annually or that the base rate, rather than being Libor as quoted on a specific renewal date, be the average of dairious six months. Either measure would have the effect of smoothing the climb of interest rates.

Revivals of Musicals Enliven British Stage

By Sheridan Morley

LONDON — A week of three Broadway classics, and none more welcome than "Golden Boy," with which Bill Bryden's team of Cottesloe prizefighters take to the Lyttleton stage of the National Theatre like the champions they have always been. Intelligently following a West End lead (productions of "Rocket to the Moon" and currently "The Country Girl" have been gracing the Apollo in Shaftesbury Avenue these last two years) the National has at last woken up to the importance of Clifford Odets, and though this is by no means his best play, I doubt we shall live to see a better production of it.

This, of course, is the one about the boxer. All contenders through to Brando in "On the Wa-terfront" started here, as did every cliché of the boxing movie — here the champ actually gets to say that his hands are broke and that he'll never get to play the violin again.

Written in 1937 to save the Group Theatre from the break-up being caused at least in part by his defection to Hollywood and Luise Rainer, it is a ringside metaphor about selling your soul if not to the movies then at least to the mobsters. In that sense it's also of course the first half of "The Country Girl," with the boxing ring as the stage and the star on his way up instead of out. But what Bryden has wonderfully remembered is that this was a play written for a genuinely group theater, and although he has found himself an intriguing new star in Jeremy Flynn, who plays the prizefighter like a gutsy Woody Allen, he has also assembled a dozen of the best supporting actors in town.

Thus we get Jack Shepherd, at the top of his form, as the homosexual gangster (a role created in the United States by Elia Kazan). For all that, "West Side Story" is a vital and important and unmissable reminder of what made musicals great before the days of roller skates and video screens. It is pure theater across three hours of tenement poetry in mo-

An earlier world of the Broadway musical has been disinterred at Chichester with the revival of "Oh, Kay!" the Gershwin-P. G. Wodehouse classic that first made a New York star of Gertrude Lawrence 60 years ago. The original book has now been touched up by Ned Sherrin and Tony Geiss and seems not a lot better or worse than ever it was, despite a couple of new characters and some intelligent cuts.

The book was never what mattered, though. What defeats the highly stylish revival is the vast open space of the Chichester stage and the casting of Jane Carr in the old Lawrence role. Carr is a talented and funny and enchanting lady, but vulnerable she is not: She is about as much in need of someone to watch over her as a Sherman tank would be, and from that initial difficulty Ian Judge's elegant production (wonderfully set by Peter Rice on a piano lid) never quite recovers. Lindsay Dolan's choreography also shows signs of a desperation to fill the stage with dancing feet even if there aren't quite enough of them, and the result is essentially "Gatsby on Ice." suspect she would not throw a baseball "like a girl," yet "tom-boy" certainly does not apply. Her 16-month-old daughter was fathered by the Kinks' Ray Davies, to whom she is not married.

Wearing no makeup, she speaks with eye contact and without intellectual pretension. She seems to have constructed an attractive anonymity, like a personality-lift, realizing how valuable anonymity was after she'd lost it. "I was really happy," she says of her early rocker's life in London 10 years ago. "I could go wherev-er I wanted and nobody cared Born in Akron in 1952, she left Ohio after working her way through three years at Kent State University as a waitress. Her independent femininity, involving for one thing an impressive flow of expletives, fascinated the British rock world when a few quid to keep afloat."

She worked as a clerk in an architects office and for the punk fashion entrepreneur and Sex Pistols manager Malcolm McLaren. She slept on a mattress on the floor, read the Bhagavad Gita, burned incense and learned Rolling Stones tunes. Then there were some guitar and back-up vocal gigs. She worked with the groups Moor Murders and Masters of the Backside. Fired from the latter, without working pa-pers, she met some guy in a pub who asked her to write for the rock magazine New Musical Ex-press. "Why not?" she thought: "I like to shoot my mouth off."

That's an understatement. She speaks more like a blast-off. She began to write what Rolling Stone called "savagely satiric re-views" for the NME. "As a kid reading the rock press I had always assumed these people must be experts. I assumed they were qualified to write." British argot is sprinkled through frenetic Ohio punctuation: "But I sussed out they were just people with opinions. They knew nothing about music, they weren't even clever. They wrote about themselves, or about what the musicians were wearing. I was shocked and discouraged."

However this is a woman not easily discouraged. "I couldn't really play guitar at the beginning. All I had was my attitude." She wrote songs and practiced chords, dynamics and timing while casting players for the band forming in her head. She learned how to book the media with hot quotes. The degrees are viewed not only as a means of honoring outstanding achievement but also of the status of the college to that of a university, providing inspirational models for the students. ultures in Transcaucasia and Soviet Central Asia, who often express disappointment in the predominantly secular, modern and sexually permissive society they confront. One study for the Ministry of Immigrant Absorption found that immigrants from Bukhara, in Soviet Central Asia, resented Israelis "for having denigrated their most important values, such as female sexual modesty and respect for parents and the elderly." Many were afraid of negative Israeli influence on the women and children in their families.

THE latest wave of emigration of Soviet Jews began shortly after the 1967 Arab-Israeli war, when Israel's lightning victory stirred a new pride in embracing a Jewish heritage. The Soviet authorities, dealing in the context of tentative internal liberalization and "They don't have the same type of jobs that the initial move toward detente with the United States, began to permit significant numbers of Jews to leave in the early 1970s.

Despite harassment of many who applied for visas — including dismissals from jobs, repeated interrogations and some cases of imprisonment -about 265,000 Jews emigrated, about 100,000 of whom went to the United States. Since 1980 the Soviet authorities have gradually cut the flow to a trickle, and now only several dozen leave each month.

The émigrés' have made considerable impact in the worlds of music and mathematics. Soviet musicians have joined Israel's two symphony orchestras and chamber orchestra, and the arrival of prominent scientists has improved Israeli teaching and research capacity in some fields, according to Yuval Neeman, minister of science

He said that among the scientists, the mathematicians have been the most influential, allowing the creation of an additional mathema ics faculty. In engineering, he said, the Soviet émigrés have become important in manufacturing, including some military industry.

LMOST none have chosen the communal life of kibbutzim, and few have entered politics, except at the extreme right, most notably in Mr. Neeman's Tehiya Party and in Gush Emmin, the militant nationalist set-tlers' movement on the occupied West Bank. In the 1981 election for Israel's parliament, a

TOKYO — Japan's leading economic indica-

10K.YO—Japan's leading economic indica-tor showed a strong economy likely to keep growing over the next few months, the Econom-ic Planning Agency said Tuesday.

The leading indicator for March, the latest reporting month, was unchanged from Febru-ary at 75. It had registered 58.3 in January and 66.7 in December.

A rise in the leading indicator usually implies that Japan's economic growth will pick up about three months later, while a fall generally implies a slowdown in economic growth will follow.

Although the leading indicator was unchanged in March, it remained above the so-called "boom or bust" line of 50, where it has held since March 1983.

According to the agency, the indicator is so designed so that any reading above 50 means that the economy will still expand, and a reading below 50 means the economy will contract.

Designed to be a measure of near-term economic trends, the leading indicator is composed of 12 indexes, including overtime work hours, machinery orders, production efficiency and a Tokyo Stock Exchange index.

Shorter-Workweek Debate Is Heating Up in Europe

By SHERRY BUCHANAN

ARIS — The Swiss distinguished themselves from the rest of Europe a few years ago by voting against a reduction in the workweek to 40 hours from 42. Switzerland is now the self-themselves. the only European country that works 42 hours a week on average. All other European countries, including Spain, which went from 45 to 40 hours after Franco's death in 1975, work an average of 40 hours or less. Belgium has the shortest average workweek, at 37 to 38 hours.

In the past, once unions in one country started pushing for and getting a shorter workweek, other European countries followed. Switzerland was the exception that confirmed the rule. The same thing could happen again. The question is whether next year's round of wage negotiations will focus on demands. for a 35-hour week. The current West German metalworkers' strike over demands for a 35-hour week has already had repercussions in France. Prime Minister Pierre Mauroy has suddenly rediscovered the electoral appeal of a 35-hour week and in a move last week that touched off a heated political debate, renewed his proposal for shorter hours. French unions are now making private noises about taking industrial action similar to that by West German unions.

Unions in Austria, Denmark, Britain, Luxembourg and Belgium have all been pushing for a 35-hour week for some time. Belgian unions want legislation for a 37-to-38-hour week first and then will ask for 35 hours.

In Italy, Spain and Sweden, unions have concentrated on wage demands rather than on a reduction in the workweek. They say that the outcome of the German strike will, if nothing else, renew

In 1983, Italian unions negotiated an increase in vacation time, but no significant reduction in the workweek. The agreement expires at the end of this year.

"My impression is that the problem of the reduction in the workweek will be taken up again," says Giacomina Cassina, of CISL, one of the three main Italian labor union federations. "I can't say if it will be the 35 hours. Unless there is a specific and generalized claim, it is difficult to envision any kind of industrial action. There is no movement toward anything like that now."

The Italian unions' priority this year has been to flight the government's demand for an end to wage indexation to inflation. The Streeties Metalysechers, Union has presented a policy that The Swedish Metalworkers Union has pursued a policy that would increase real wages and decrease working time for workers who need it the most, those on continuous shifts for example. "At present we are not pushing for a general reduction in working hours to 35 hours," says Mats Johansson, of the Swedish Metalworkers Union. "Our members say that the important thing is to win in real wages. It is more important than working hours

In Spain, unions are still fighting for the 40-hour week. Over the past five years, Spain has gradually reduced the workweek from 45 to 40 hours. But, because the reduction was negotiated on an annual rather than a weekly basis, employers will not pay overtime if a worker works 42 hours one week and 38 the next.

If the West German unions win, it could change pressure politics at the European Community in Brussels. Right now, France, the Netherlands and Belgium already have shorter work-ing weeks than their competitors in the EC. It is in their interest that everybody else gets a shorter week as well. If West Germany goes to a 39-hour week, for example, the West German govern-ment might join France, the Netherlands and Belgium in their demand for a European-wide shorter workweek. This would leave the British government isolated on the issue.

The unions are selling the 35-hour week as a cure for unemployment. But there is no hard evidence that a reduction in the workweek actually creates jobs or even saves scale. Statistics are hard to come by. And case-by-case results are contradictory

"That's the funny thing," says Giacomina Cassina of CISL.
"Results are very different. Union-backed studies argue that the reduction in the workweek creates or saves jobs. Employer studies have opposite findings."

Mr. Johansson says, "As far as we can see, the reduction in the workweek hasn't resulted in any major changes in the level of employment in Sweden. Especially in the manufacturing sector, (Continued on Page 11, Col. 3)

Volvo Had Profit Leap In Quarter But Revenue

Slipped by 8%

ional Herald Tribune GOTHENBURG - AB Volvo, citing higher car sales, reported Tuesday that its first-quarter pretax earnings more than doubled from a year earlier, although sales declined 8 percent.

Volvo, an automotive, energy and food group, reported that prof-it rose to a record 2.6 billion kronor ($302 million), or 34.40 kronor a share, from 1.03 billion kronor, or 15.40 kronor a share, a year earlier. Sales fell to 21.69 billion kronor from 23.63 billion kronor. The company said that 85 percent of sales were outside Swed Volvo's board chairman and chief executive, Pehr G. Gyllenhammar, said the higher earnings came mostly from Volvo's passenger-car sales and reflected a return to profit by the group's energy op-erations. Car sales rose 34 percent io 8.29 billion kronor.

Volvo said that the lower total revenue reflected a sharp 40-per-cent revenue decline by Volvo's energy subsidiaries, mainly STC Scandinavian Trading Co. Sales of the energy units totaled 6.9 billion

STC reported first-quarter profit of 35 million kronor late last week, and said it was selling Scandrill, its U.S. oil- and gas-exploration com-pany, to Bankers Trust Co., a U.S. creditor, for a token $1.

Sales of trucks rose 51 percent, to 3.57 billion kronor, and Volvo noted that "the upturn was particular-ly striking in the United States." Mr. Gyllenhammar said that Vol-vo's U.S. heavy-truck subsidiary, Volvo White Motor Inc., "is making a profit.' Sales of Volvo units other than energy rose an average 31 percent, Volvo said.

Mr. Gyllenhammar said that Volvo's first-quarter results did not include capital gains from the re-cent sales of Volvo's holding in Consafe, the offshore-services group; in Sonesson, the light-industry group, and the planned sales of Volvo's 25-percent holding in Stora Kopparberg AB, a forestproducts concern, and Atlas Copco AB; a mining-equipment company.

Analysts responded favorably to Volvo's first-quarter results. Brian Knox, a speciálist in Scandinavian shares at London's Grieveson Grant called the earnings "ouite billion kronor rather than the 6 malcy. billion we have been looking at."

Volvo's managing director, Ha-kan Frisinger, predicted that Vol-vo's car sales in the United States ould reach about 100,000 cars in 1984. He said that if stricter U.S. content legislation applying to automobile manufacturing was passed, "we have some thought on casures to take." However, he refused to elaborate on whether Volvo might open an auto-production facility in the United States.

Volvo's passenger-car deliveries in the first quarter totaled 95,000 units, up from 81,000 a year earlier. Truck deliveries were also sharply higher, Volvo reported, but it did not give precise figures.

Several of the early leaders have announced major layoffs in recent weeks to cut costs. The latest was last Thursday when Visicorp, marketer of the first popular electronic spreadsheet reduced its staff 20 percent. U.S. and Japan Outline Steps For Freer Yen

By William Chapman Washington Post Service

TOKYO - The United States and Japan Tuesday announced a package of financial-liberalization steps that goes part of the way toward opening Japan's capital markets but leaves several U.S. requests unmet.

The package provides for more access by foreigners to Japanese currency and for steps that would make the yen more of an international currency.
It will give U.S. banks the right to enter Japanese commercial banking and greater access to yen savings in Japan, and it offers the first timid steps toward a broader Euroyen market for both foreign and domestic companies.

But the proposals outlined here and in Washington make only modest advances toward the deregulation of Japanese interest rates, a crucial U.S. request over months of sometimes angry negotiations.

Opinion was divided in Japan over whether the package would achieve the main purpose desired by the Reagan administration — a strengthening of the value of the yen, which, in turn, would tend to curb the flow of Japanese exports that have piled up record trade surpluses this year. Some sources, including one official of Japan's Finance Ministry, said they suspect the effect initially would be to further weaken the yen against the dollar, and thus possibly trigger a new wave of Japanese exports. However, the Finance Ministry official said the long-term effect should be to raise the yen's

The package is the work of a Japanese-U.S. working group that has met periodically to put flesh on the bones of a vague agreement made here last November during President Ronald Reagan's state

The United States had insisted throughout those talks that Japan, as a great world economic power, had to loosen controls on its financial system and help make the yen an international reserve currency, taking some of the burden of world finance off the dollar. Some experts interviewed here

Tuesday did not believe that the effect of the proposed measures would be as great as the U.S. Trea-sury had hoped. "I'm not all that optimistic that we have got a real liberalization." said a U.S. banker. The U.S. had pressed for a completely free Euroyen market that would be attractive to foreign and He noted that earlier this year domestic investors anxious to buy securities denominated in yen. But the final report issued Tues-

PRINCES AND PEASANTS: Smallpox in History

By Donald R. Hopkins. 380 pp. $25. University of Chicago Press, 5801 Ellis Avenue, Chicago, Ill. 60637.

Reviewed by Frank Fenner

THE global eradication of smallpox, accepted as a verified fact by the World Health Assembly in May 1980, sets the seal on the history of one of the most terrible scornges of mankind. It is an appropriate time, therefore, to review the history of this disease, which to most people in Europe and North America has been only a shadowy threat which called for vaccination certificates when they traveled to Asia or Africa.

It was not always so. Two hundred years ago smallpox struck at all classes of society in Europe and in the Americas. To a greater extent even than the Black Death, it influenced the course of history, for it affected popula-tions and political developments in every con-tinent. Its most dramatic geopolitical effects were probably in the Americas, where it made possible the swift and effective defeat and destruction of the native inhabitants and the establishment of European settlements. But it also shaped the course of history in Europe, where on several occasions it killed important national rulers at critical times. Then came, for the first time in history, a method of effectively preventing the worst effects of an infectious disease, that was specific for smallpox, namely prior inoculation with smallpox scab material or variolation. An ancient practice in India and China, it was introduced to Europe and North America early in the eighteenth century. Besides saving some lives, albeit at considerable risk, it prepared the ground for the demonstration by Edward Jen-ner in 1798 that smallpox could be prevented and potentially eradicated by the safe procedure of vaccination with cowpox virus. One hundred and seventy six years after Jenner declared global eradication to be feasible, it was accomplished.

All this, and much more, is now assembled into a fascinating book by Dr. Donald R. Hopkins, himself a veteran of the field operations of the smallpox eradication campaigns in West Africa and India. Because records of their illnesses were much better kept than those of ordinary folk, and because their deaths influenced dynastic succession, Hopkins deals extensively with the impact of smallpox on kings, queens and their families. But he also records in detail the fatal impact of smallpox on the American Indians, the havoc caused by smallpox to the early European settlers of North America, the synergy between smallpox and slavery in Africa and the Americas, and the influence of smallpox on history in Asia

Minor, India, China and Japan. Smallpox struck both prince and peasant. To forestall its effects men invented gods and goddesses, developed the bizarre "red treatment" that persisted for a thousand years, and finally smallpox acted as the raw material for two major fields of natural science, virology and immunology, and the world's greatest achievement so far in the field of public health, rts cradication.

The history of smallpox and the effects of smallpox on history are developed with skill and lucidity by Donald Hopkins in this biography of a disease that was once cosmopolitan and has now disappeared.

Frank Fenner was formerly chairman of the Global Commission for the Certification of Smallpox Eradication.

On the Playing Fields

By Russell Baker

from its usual fare of mindless games that big people play. froth, Broadway this season has come up with two new plays that deal with America as a real place. They are Arthur Kopit's "End of the World" and David Mamet's "Glengarry Glen Ross."

Both are comedic without being comedy. The laughter they produce is the laughter we use to defend ourselves when confronted by pain and horror that would be intolerable without laughter. Pain is the subject of Mamet's play about real estate sharks fighting for survival in the only business they know; horror is the subject of Kopit's, which, as the title suggests, is about

Though the two plays are quite different, both writers use the same striking metaphor of America as a nation of game players, a nation in which everything from business success to preservation of the human race becomes just another game to be won or lost.

The game in "Glengarry Glen Ross" is a high stakes competition among a gang of real estate cut-throats. The salesman who gulls the greatest number of suckers will win a new car from the company: the one who finishes last gets fired.

"End of the World" focuses on more elegant game players, the so-called "strategic thinkers" who work to preserve the nuclear balance of terror. In this game there can be no winner, only a perpetually flawless continuation of the game. If a competitor makes a wrong move, everybody loses and the game ends in a bang. The assumption is that since nobody can play any game flawlessly forever, sooner or later everybody must lose. Kopit stresses this depressing theme in comic inven-tions, that give the nuclear game players a fair chance to defend the game persuasively while dramatizing the idiocy of marching straight to doomsday because logic proves there is no place else to go.

Unlike "Glengarry Glen Ross," which has won the Pulitzer Prize, "End of the World" is structurally messy, and the New York critics have not been kind enough to it. Yet it is a remarkable dramatization of the extent to which the gra-JEW YORK — in a departure vest matters have been turned into

Well, there is nothing new about adults treating life as a game. American politics has always borrowed from poker, and the Russians are masters of advancing their pawns to powerful squares on the chess board.

President Nixon, fascinated by football, was rarely without a "game plan." In the corporate world you know you've been warned when the boss asks, "why don't you get on the team?"

It's probably natural for grownups, when faced with difficulties, to revert to the ways of childhood when games first challenge them to solve problems, like how to snatch the last chair in going-to-Jerusalem or how to find a cunningly hidden playmate at hide-and-seek. Trying to make life conform to game play, though can only be disastrous.

The problem is that all games, except for chess, contain an element of chance, which will often defeat even the cleverest player. When survival becomes the point of the game, there is a powerful motive to eliminate the element of chance by cheating.

This is what happens to Mamet's players in "Glengarry Glen Ross." The competition seems to be a game, but the stakes encourage so much cheating that it turns into real life. If there is a message in Mamet's play it is: If you think life is a game, friend, this knife in your back won't hurt a bit. Kopit's nuclear game players in "End of the World" are trying to create a game like chess, in which ent of chance is removed. If they succeed, however, the game cannot end, but must be played again and again, incessantly, with both players always making all the correct moves, so that

This is theoretically possible, Kopit's characters believe, but entirely inhuman. What is human, his protagonist discovers at the end, is a terrible impatience about always playing to a draw, which encourages a crazy impulse to see what would happen if, just once, you made the wrong move.

On Guard With Hotel Queen Helmsley

By Judie Glave The Associated Press

NEW YORK — Inside the landmark mansion that serves as the base of the towering Helmsley Palace hotel, an American queen reigns supreme.

Leona Helmsley was not born of royal blood, but the 1,050 employees at the hotel and more than 5,000 others at 30 other Helmsley properties from Florida to Texas certainly treat her with royal deference.

Whether out of respect for her position as president of the Helmsley Hotel chain given to her in 1980 by her husband, the real estate magnate Harry B. Helmsley - or fear of her often intimidating demeanor, one thing is certain: Whatever Leona Helmsley wants, Leona Helmsley gets.

"There's an ashtray missing from here," she says, pointing a jeweled finger at a flower-laden table in the lobby of the SS-story hotel, which adjoins the restored, 19th-century Villard Houses. "I want it replaced."

"Yes, Mrs. Helmsley," is the immediate

"Very rarely will you see dirt around my hotels, very rarely," she says before embarking on one of her daily sweeps through the gilded and silk brocade-decorated palace behind St. Patrick's Cathedral in midtown

You'll also never see long-haired employees with unshined shoes or hear discourteous clerks or the clatter of dishes as busboys remove them from tables.

These are a few of Mrs. Helmsley's pet peeves, ones not highlighted in an awardwinning advertising campaign for the Helmsleys' Harley hotel chain. The highly visible print and magazine ads let guests know that, among other things, they can expect brightly lit bathrooms. shrimp instead of peanuts at the bar, and hangers that are not attached to closet bars. Separate ads for The Helmsley Palace boast: "It's the only palace in the world where the queen stands guard." It is, in fact, her exacting eye that has led to her hard-as-nails reputation among her em-ployees, who know first-hand how the palace queen likes to crack the whip.

"So you've got an interview with her highness," says a beliboy assigned to escort a reporter to Mrs. Helmsley's fifth-floor office. Better you than me."

When everyone is seated the queen enters. She is wearing a beige angora dress adorned with pearls and a diamond-encrusted topaz ring. She appears warmer and more attractive than her ads suggest.

During the interview, she says stories about her toughness are concocted. The bellboy's remarks are cited as evidence to the Helmsley: "Respect yes, fear no."

"Who is he?" Leona mugs, twisting her face into a mock, murderous look. She laughs, but the mention of her "tough cookie" reputation is enough to crumble the temper of this perfectly poised businesswom-

"I'm not a tough cookie," she insists, her husky, alto voice climbing a couple of octaves in exasperation. "If I were a man, they'd say I was a great executive. I'm a woman, so I'm a

"I run a tight ship; there's no doubt about it, I do. I see nothing wrong with that, I think it's good business."

The ads are "funny," not pretentious, she insists. She says they are designed to show that she wants only the best for guests who shell out a minimum $175 a night for a single room at the palace.

"I know I'm not a queen," she says, her voice dropping to a near whisper, and then in a sing-song adds: "I'm Harry's queen and Harry's a prince, so maybe I'm a princess."
This princess was born Leona Mindy Rosenthal to a milliner father and housewife mother in the Flatbush section of Brooklyn. "I modeled for a while, I got married and then I got divorced and I went back to work," is how she sums up "life before Harry." She refuses to reveal her age, although she is reportedly near 60. She also says little about the years she appeared on hundreds of cigarette ads and biliboards as the "Chesterfield girl." Neither does she discuss the deaths from heart disease of her father at age 52, or her only child, a son from her first marriage, in

But those losses may explain her diligence about exercise and health.

The Heimsleys spend an hour each morning swimming in their penthouse pool and adhere to a strict, low-cholesterol, low-salt diet, which she plans to share in a cookbook of her favorite recipes. Profits from the book will be given to the American Heart Fund. Yet it is neither her past nor her future size wishes to discuss, because Harry and her job

"Hiya, gorgeous," she purrs as the spruce, 75-year-old Heimsley enters the room.
She gives him a hug, kiss and then an

are all that really count.

Her entrance into the hotel business came when she challenged her husband to choose between three rooms she decorated for the unopened Palace and those done by a professional decorator. Helmsley said her room was lovely "and that's how I got into the hotel

In 1980, she was named president of the 27 Harley (a contraction of Harry and Leona) business hotels and four luxury hotels here the Carlton House, St. Moritz, Helmsley Pal-ace and the Park Lane, where they live.

A year later, occupancy rates at Harley hotels were up 28 percent while the rest of the industry "softened," according to a hotel industry magazine.

This year, the Helmsley Palace was awarded the American Automobile Association's "Five Diamond Award" for excellence. It is one of only 47 hotels, motels and motor imis in the United States, Canada and Mexico to receive the award and the only hotel ever so conored in New York State.

The reason, she says, is that she demands the best, and her employees know it. "Are you afraid of me?" Mrs. Helmsley barks to the manager of the Tea Room, in the presence of a reporter. "No, ma'am," the woman says, a nervous laugh rising in her throat. "I'm not alraid of you. I respect you."

"You see?" she says, turning to her interviewer. "Respect yes, fear no. There's a big
